

Practice-To-Theory-To-Practice

Part 2

Once you have identified your practical concerns and your goals to support students in the WIL journey, the next steps are:

Examine which theories, principles, or lenses may be useful to support your goals.

In WIL there are many experiential education theories and models to draw upon.

There are also many different theories and models with respect to equity, diversity and inclusion in the workplace.

Analyze the theories, principles, or lenses for their utility to support your goals for your students and specific context.

Do you have underlying questions that are left unanswered?

How might you shift your educational goals?

Using on your understanding of theories, principles, or lenses, you will apply this into your practice.

As you try new things with your practice take the time to evaluate how effective it is and adjust as necessary.

Seek feedback from your colleagues and students.
